

BRIAN SEWELL ARCHIVE COLLECTION

BS – Boxlist 2: Articles on general subjects

The material in this archive comprises correspondence, published and unpublished material, research notes, diaries, photographs and some personal effects. The collection has not yet been catalogued, but its contents are described in three separate boxlists – one for each of the three main sequences:

Boxlist 1 - Articles relating to the arts

Boxlist 2 - Articles relating to general subjects

Boxlist 3 – Personal papers (relating to every area of Sewell's life)

This boxlist details material in sequence 2. Brian Sewell arranged his articles relating to general subjects into a sequence of files organised, by and large, A-Z by title of the article. Alongside draft and finished copy, files may also include research and related correspondence. The majority of titles listed below are those given by Sewell. A small amount of material was loose on acquisition and in these instances a title has been added by the Centre.

Box numbers have been allocated by the Centre. Dates of materials are given where possible; dates in square brackets have been assigned by the Centre.

PLEASE NOTE: work on this material is ongoing and consequently, this boxlist is incomplete: it includes details of articles titles A-T only. It will be updated again at the end of July 2017. Please contact Research Collections staff if you have any questions.

JOURNALISTIC OUTPUT: ARTICLES RELATING TO GENERAL SUBJECTS

The following sequence comprises articles (published and unpublished) written by Sewell on a wide variety of general subjects for a number of different publications. The majority of articles comprise Sewell's regular weekly opinion piece for the Evening Standard. In these columns, Sewell responded to the stories of the day, in particular focusing on politics, the monarchy and society. The sequence also includes book reviews.

Note: Many of Sewell's original files were marked with the word 'Pertinax'. Sewell himself left no record as to why and how he was employing this word, but during work on the archive, we have come to understand the following:

- Pertinax is almost certainly a reference to the Roman Emperor of that name, to whom Sewell referred in an article from mid-1996 as his 'chosen mentor'. In fact, his habit of marking 'Pertinax' on his files seems to have been adopted shortly after this article was published.

- Pertinax seems to have been used mainly on articles written for his regular weekly Evening Standard column on general topics

- Where the term is used, it is always accompanied either by a series of Roman numerals or by an Arabic numeral followed by a series of Roman numerals e.g. Pertinax 02.xxiv. In this example, '02' refers to the year in which the article was written, in this case 2002. The Roman numerals denote that this was the 24th article he'd written for the Evening Standard that year.

- Articles in this series prior to 2000, and beginning in 1996, whilst still seemingly following this system, are not given an Arabic numeral by which to distinguish the year in which they were written, and are instead just numbered consecutively with Roman numerals.
